Norbert Maday

The Archdiocese Helps a Felon and Tries to Get Him released From Prison early

Although convicted of abuse and witness intimidation, the Archdiocese increased his salary, promised to not remove him from priesthood

The personnel file of Norbert Maday is a perfect example of how the Archdiocese of Chicago bent over backwards to help a convicted child-molesting priest, but did little to nothing to help his victims.

Maday was convicted of child sexual abuse and intimidating witnesses in 1994, six years after the Archdiocese learned that Mayday was molesting kids. He was sentenced to 20 years in prison. In response, Cardinal Bernardin increased the priest’s salary to help him in prison, after loaning Maday $100,000 for his criminal defense.

Bernardin refused to pursue a canonical trial to remove Maday from the priesthood, and more than decade after Maday’s conviction, Cardinal George was still sending new allegations to the Review Board. In one decree, signed 13 years after Maday’s conviction, George stated that “information at least seems to be true” that Mayday—who admitted his crimes in a clemency hearing—abused kids.

In his 2006 deposition, Cardinal George was questioned extensively regarding documents evidencing the Cardinal’s personal involvement from 1997 through 2004 to get Maday special treatment in prison and to get him released from prison early. In one letter, Cardinal George writes to the Governor of Wisconsin thanking him for allowing them to bring Maday’s mother’s body to the prison for a private viewing prior to her funeral. In numerous other letters Cardinal George and other Archdiocese officials write to Maday and prison officials detailing their efforts to secure Maday’s early release from prison. The Archdiocese is not successful in getting Maday released early.
