Kenneth Ruge

Ruge abused, then pimped boys to Fr. Joseph Becker

One victim told: “Get drunk. Get laid. Pick a fight. You are too uptight.”

Fr. Kenneth Ruge’s personnel file shows the great lengths Archdiocese went in order to ensure that sex abuse by priests was kept secret from parishioners, victims, and most importantly, the press. According to the files and victims’ accounts, Ruge molested boys with Fr Robert Becker, a high-ranking priest and former president of the Canon Law Society of America. Ruge would abuse the boys, then “pimp” them to Becker at Ruge’s privately owned trailer.

In 1986, when the Archdiocese and Vicar for Priests received a definitive report that Ruge had raped a boy, the police are not called. Instead, internal memos show that that Vicar for Clergy instead questioned the victim’s meaning of the term “rape.” When that same victim reported to a priest at Quigley High School, the victim was told he is too “uptight.” Despite this and other accusations, Ruge was promoted to pastor at Divine Savior in 1987. In 1991, reporters had begun to ask the Archdiocese about Ruge, so Cardinal Bernardin removed Ruge from the parish and told parishioners that Ruge was being sent to a hospital for “personal issues.” Parishioners were also told there was only one accusation against Ruge from decades earlier. Ruge was put under “monitoring.” Other pastors were told to keep a watch for victims, but no announcement was made to parishioners at other churches where Ruge worked.

In 1992, the Archdiocese was served a Grand Jury subpoena about Ruge, and the priest was immediately sent to treatment. Documents show that the Archdiocese gave the state’s attorney some records. By 1994, Ruge was working at Catholic Charities somewhat unsupervised, even though the Archdiocese was aware that he abused numerous kids.

In a November 2007 deposition, Bishop Raymond Goedert spoke about many of the allegations against Ruge, including allegations made by another priest. Goedert conceded that Ruge was only removed after there was possibility of a public scandal.
